Millennials, Baby Boomers Disagree About Sharing Salary Information

31% have never told a live-in romantic partner how much money they make

NEW YORK – October 31, 2018 – Millennials (ages 18-37) are more likely than other generations to share their salary information with others, including coworkers, friends outside of work, romantic partners who they don’t live with, and family members other than their spouse, according to a new Bankrate.com report. Click here for more information:

The contrast is especially stark when compared to Baby Boomers (ages 54-72):

- One in three Millennials have shared their salary information with a coworker, compared to 18% of Baby Boomers.

- Nearly half (48%) of Millennials have told their salary to a romantic partner who they didn’t live with, versus 29% of Baby Boomers.

- Fifty-eight percent of 18- to 37-year-olds have told a friend how much they make, compared to 33% of Baby Boomers.

- Almost two-thirds (64%) of Millennials have told a family member other than their spouse their salary, compared to 43% of Baby Boomers.

“Sharing your salary information has long been considered taboo, but that notion could be changing, especially among young adults,” said Bankrate.com analyst Amanda Dixon. “When you’re ready to ask for a raise or negotiate your salary at a new job, knowing how much you’re earning relative to others can be helpful.”

Overall, just under 1 in 4 Americans (24%) has divulged his or her pay to a coworker. Men are more likely than women to have done so (29% vs. 20%), as well as those with higher income and education levels.

Shockingly, 31% have never told a live-in romantic partner how much money they make. This includes nearly 1 in 5 (19%) who are currently married or living with a partner. Lower earners and the less educated are the most likely to have withheld this information in a serious relationship.

Meanwhile, 38% have disclosed their salary to a non-live-in romantic partner, 44% have told a friend and 54% have shared with a family member who is not their spouse.
“Not telling your friends how much you make is one thing, but failing to share that information with a significant other could be a bad idea,” added Dixon. “When you’re setting short-term or long-term financial goals, it’s impossible to be on the same page if you’re not open and honest about how much money is coming in.”

This study was conducted for Bankrate via landline and cell phone by SSRS on its Omnibus survey platform. Interviews were conducted from October 2-7 among a sample of 1,017 respondents. The margin of error is +/- 3.72% at the 95% confidence level. SSRS Omnibus is a national, weekly, dual-frame bilingual telephone survey. All SSRS Omnibus data are weighted to represent the target population.

About Bankrate.com:

Bankrate.com provides consumers with the expert advice and tools needed to succeed throughout life's financial journey. For over two decades, Bankrate.com has been a leading personal finance destination. The company offers award-winning editorial content, competitive rate information, and calculators and tools across multiple categories, including mortgages, deposits, credit cards, retirement, automobile loans and taxes. Bankrate aggregates rate information from over 4,800 institutions on more than 300 financial products. With coverage of over 600 local markets, Bankrate generates rate tables in all 50 U.S. states.

For more information:

Ryan Feldman
Public Relations Specialist
ryan.feldman@bankrate.com
917-368-8637