Real Estate and Cash Are Americans’ Top Preferred Investments Over the Next 10 Years

Stocks fall out of favor, with cash and crypto seeing notable gains

NEW YORK – June 23, 2021 – Real estate and cash investments top the list of Americans’ preferred ways to invest over a period of 10 years or more, according to a Bankrate.com report. Real estate reassumed the top spot, with 28% of Americans pointing to it as their preferred way to invest money not needed for a decade or longer, up from 26% last year. Amid record low interest rates and inflation on the rise, cash investments such as savings accounts or CDs, are a close second, jumping to the highest level since 2014, with 25% of Americans citing it, up from 18% last year. Click here for more information:

For the first time since 2017, the stock market ran a distant third behind real estate and cash, chosen by just 16%, despite topping the list in 2020 with 28% of Americans citing it. Further, 13% cited gold and other precious metals (down from 14% last year), 9% picked cryptocurrency, such as Bitcoin, (up from 4% in 2019-20 and 2% in 2018), and 4% chose bonds (unchanged from last year) as their preferred long-term investment over a decade or more.

“Sentiment on the stock market has seesawed back and forth over the past 5 years,” said Bankrate.com chief financial analyst, Greg McBride, CFA, “but building wealth over the long-term means remaining committed to holding on and consistently investing through the inevitable ups and downs.”

The stock market was more popular amongst the highest earning households (22% making more than $75,000 vs. 11% making less than $30,000) and college graduates (23% vs. 9% with no more than a high school diploma). Similar divides appeared in cash investments (30% earning less than $75,000 vs. 14% earning more than $75,000), and real estate (22% each: lowest earning households, those with no more than a high school diploma vs. 36% each: highest earning households; college graduates).

While more than one-third of Americans (35%) indicate some level of comfort with investing in cryptocurrencies such as Bitcoin, 61% say they are not comfortable. Nearly half of millennials (49%; ages 25-40) are comfortable investing in crypto, compared to 37% of Gen Xers (ages 41-56) and 22% of baby boomers (ages 57-75).

Finally, inflation does not appear to have much of an impact on how Americans would invest money over a decade or more, with 58% indicating that it will not change how they invest.

Millennials (29%) had the highest likelihood of saying they would invest more aggressively due to higher inflation, compared to 19% of Gen Xers and 14% of baby boomers.
“The strong preference for cash is ironic given record low interest rates and renewed concerns about inflation, and could be particularly damaging the longer inflation exceeds returns on cash investments,” McBride added. “While the pandemic has underscored the need to have sufficient short-term savings, cash investments do not pay off over long time periods.”

Methodology:

This study was conducted for Bankrate via telephone by SSRS on its Omnibus survey platform. The SSRS Omnibus is a national, weekly, dual-frame bilingual telephone survey. Interviews were conducted from May 25-30, 2021 among a sample of 1,008 respondents in English (972) and Spanish (36). Telephone interviews were conducted by landline (203) and cell phone (805, including 514 without a landline phone). The margin of error for total respondents is +/- 3.71% at the 95% confidence level. All SSRS Omnibus data are weighted to represent the target population.

About Bankrate.com:

Bankrate has guided savers and spenders through the next steps of their financial journeys since 1976. Whether it's rates or information on mortgages, investing, credit cards, personal loans, insurance, taxes or retirement, the company offers various free resources to help consumers reach their goals. From product comparison tools to award-winning editorial content, Bankrate.com provides objective information and actionable next steps. Bankrate.com also aggregates rate information from over 4,800 institutions on more than 300 financial products, with coverage in more than 600 local markets. It’s why over 100 million people put their trust in Bankrate.com every year.

For More Information:

Julie Guacci
Publicist julie.guacci@bankrate.com
973-525-3026